2005 state budget agreements focus on job growth and economic stimulation while protecting core education funding

LANSING – Michigan will be in a better position to create jobs in the new economy because of the 2005 state budget agreements reached today in Lansing, said Sen. Laura Toy, R-Livonia.

“Short-term fixes are not enough to bring Michigan’s economy back up to speed,” Toy said. “The budget agreements reached today focus on long-term solutions that will help Michigan adapt to today’s changing economy.”

Legislators pushed hard for passage of their JOBS Action Plan as a way to improve Michigan’s economic future. The most recently signed five proposals offer tax incentives to small and mid-sized businesses that invest in job creation. They are the latest in a series of 54 bills signed in less than a year that are designed at spurring economic growth.

Toy said legislative leaders also secured additional funding for Michigan’s fledgling life sciences industry, doubling it from $15 million to $30 million in 2005.

“Our future depends on our ability to embrace new technology and new industries,” Toy said. “Additional funds will allow the life sciences industry to grow, creating more jobs and improving Michigan’s economic outlook.”

The budget agreement announced today culminates nearly six months of negotiations between the administration and the Legislature and closes a projected $1.045 billion deficit. The agreement sets state general fund spending at $8.7 billion in 2005. Eliminating the deficit is achieved through $450 million in new revenue from increased cigarette and casino taxes, and nearly $595 million in spending cuts and budget accounting adjustments.

The agreement also keeps the state’s foundation aid payment to public schools at its current level of $6,700 per pupil while ensuring growing school districts receive sufficient funding to meet increased demand.

“A solid education system is critical to the long-term success of Michigan’s economy,” Toy said. “Maintaining a top-notch workforce starts with a quality education for our youth.”

Legislators will put the final touches on the 2005 budget when they return to session on Sept. 8 and will finish before the next fiscal year starts on Oct. 1, 2004.
